In general, this means checking out dozens of ringtone sites on one internet and choosing a good one that is compatible with the phone model. Some sites charge for using ringtones to cover song royalties, among other things, and some sites offer shades for free. Many older songs (such as classic songs) have been around long enough that their copyrights have expired - they have become public, so they are free for anyone to use. Once you have found the ringtone, you just need to get it into the memory of your phone. You can do this in several different ways depending on your specific phone model. The three main ways to add a new ringtone are: Ad Download ringtone program to phone from computer through data cable. Send the program to the phone via the radio waves. Use the keyboard to type the program directly into your phone. Phones can use only one specific method, but many phones have several options. Check the user manual to see what your phone can do. If you have the right phone, software, and computer configuration, downloading ringtones via a data link or infrared interface may be the simplest option, but setting everything up at first requires some work and expense. A more popular way is to send a new ringtone to your phone via radio waves. This approach originated in Nokia, but other manufacturers have since added this feature to their phones. The basic idea is to send a special text message to the phone that includes a ringtone program - on most phones, this is done either with a short messaging service or with the technology of an enhanced messaging service. Nokia originally developed the Short Message service for sending short text messages between phones. Later, Nokia and Intel created intelligent communication, which is a special protocol for sending functional, non-text data via SMS. Basically, a smart text message is encoded so that the equipped phone recognizes it as graphics, ringtone, etc. The most common way to transfer ringtones over radio waves is to visit a ringtone Web site, select enter your phone number and and Site administrators send a message directly to your phone. Alternatively, you can use the SMS gateway site to send a specific message to your phone yourself. This means finding the desired ringtone code, finding it in a suitable format (for example, nokia binary format) and copying it as a smart message. Cell phones with a melody composer can write ringtones directly. The easiest way to use this feature is to find the right keypress sequence for tuning on the Web. This sequence explains which buttons are pressed on the phone in composer mode so that you can program the desired ringtone (see the instructions for use in the phone's composer mode). Of course, for the ringtone to work, the sequence must be in the correct format. Fortunately, you can find a lot of sequences online for most phone brands. As mobile phones evolve, ringtones also become more complicated. Already, some phones have a polyphonic ringtone feature, which means that the phone can play more than one note at a time, allowing for richer, harmonized songs. Some new phones allow you to record songs and voice messages to ringtones yourself. With many of these models, you can also set up different ringtones for different incoming numbers, so you know who will call you without even looking at your phone. Before long, ringtones have graduated from outside excitement into an essential phone feature. For more information about different ringtone formats and hundreds of available ringtones online, see the links on the next page. Free ringtones are a great way to add fun and personality to your phone without having to spend hard-earned money on even more phone accessories. The websites below allow you to download some free ringtones to your phone in a few minutes, and some can even let you create your own ringtones.
